FOREWORD

I am extremely glad to know that the second issue of the GNLU Journal of Law Development and Politics is being launched. I heartily congratulate the Editorial Board for its success in continuing the literary endeavor to serve the academic fraternity by bringing out this issue. It has been a pleasure to learn that the students of law have taken up the initiative of not only limiting themselves to the legal field, but venturing into other fields of academics through this journal.

The main aspect of an interdisciplinary magazine is about maintaining balance among the various subjects. This journal has been able to do this meticulously and the basic rubric of this journal has been a subtle poise among the several disciplines.

In the modern age, one can say that knowledge is a power and it is not limited. Relegating the concept that a journal being published from a legal background will generally cater to the legal fraternity, this journal has made its place in the libraries of several institutes not limiting itself to law.

I hope that the journal will keep meeting the expectations of its readers to provide substantial contributions in the field of academics as a whole.

I wish the very best to the endeavours of the persons involved in making this journal a success and hope that the second issue becomes a success like the previous one.
